Blemished skin beyond the teenage years

Inflamed blemishes, redness or annoying shine – many reasons to no longer feel at ease in our own skin because blemished skin can also cause psychological suffering. Even after puberty, many people still suffer from pimples, blemishes, etc. And this really has an effect on their self-confidence ...

Blemished skin has two faces

Blemished skin is not always the same. There are two types: Seborrhoe oleosa and Seborrhoe sicca. Oleosa can be very easily recognized by oily shine – mostly on the whole face. It is very resistant and elastic, looks plump and firm, doesn't have many (fine) lines and often suffers from inflamed blemishes. Sicca, on the other hand, looks rather like dry skin at first glance. It is characterized by often deep, painful deposits that are very difficult to extract. Sicca mostly looks irritated and reacts with red patches.

Effective silver

The bioactive, antibacterial effect of silver has been used for millennia. The ancient Persians drank from silver mugs for protection against bacteria. Today, surgical instruments are coated with silver to keep them germ-free and NASA uses silver filters for germ-free water. After 15 years of development, a world-famous German institute found a way to use the effect of the precious metal for cosmetics. Silver soothes inflammations, moisturizes and cares and thus offers triple protection for your skin:

The antibacterial effect of silver eradicates microorganisms and encases the skin in an invisible, protective film.

The regulating effect of silver normalizes the complexion, the skin looks refined and soft.

The stabilizing effect of silver maintains a beautiful, even complexion when used regularly.
